“ Poppop we will forever miss you. You were the person who always made sure to call and sing Happy Birthday first to all 17 grandchildren. After having my daughter you were always cheering me on as a mother. You always told me how nicely I dressed her and it made me feel so good. I dont know what it's going to be like to not be able to send you pictures and to get those holiday and birthday texts. They truly don't make them like you anymore. You were so real and honest. You cherished those you loved and even those who passed before you. I love you Poppop so much.

It was so very nice to meet you Valerie and your brother Derek last night. Your pop pop was the best man that I knew. We would text each other every morning at 7:00 a.m. as we were drinking our coffee. I miss him so much. Always a pleasure, love Jen

“ My man Bones, you died on my birthday. You made sure that I would never have a birthday without having a wonderful memory of you. I love you so much.

“ Bones has been my best friend since I was a teenager. He taught me that I should not only be street smart, but I should be book smart as well. He taught me many life lessons. We have had many laughs, many cries, and many many many stories throughout the years. He will always be my best friend, and I am a better person for knowing him. Thank you for always being there for me Bones. I love you and I miss you, love, Eddie.

“ How can I only share one memory of Bones? Bones was my husband Eddie and my best friend. Bones and Eddie have been friends for 40 years. He was top shelf. Bones and I texted each other every single day at 7am as we drank our coffee. I will miss him immensely. He was often imitated but never duplicated. It was my pleasure to know him and love him for most of my life.
