“ I miss you so much. I wish I could just call you one last time. It's been over two months since you've left and I still can't fathom that you're gone. My heart hurts so much. You deserve to be here.

“ Nicky,

Our relationship began as colleagues. You stole my pens repeatedly from my desk. How quickly from a colleague you became my friend, my work hubby (though you always threatened that divorce papers were coming), one of the very true people I had in this lifetime. You were there for me whenever I needed. What I'd do to have one more of our hour plus long phone calls talking about it all whether work or personal matters. You always made my day stopping by the office. I remember when I left the township, you didn't stop by the office that day and texted to apologize yet my response was that it wasn't goodbye for us and boy was it not. We should've met for those drinks like we always said we were going to - I put the Murray's Bar chip in your casket that you bought me that one time when John passed away - so that you can use it for your first vodka on the rocks in Heaven. My god my heart and soul hurts so bad knowing you're gone. I called you crying so many times before how I need to call you crying now except it's over the fact that you're gone. I needed you. Your family needed you - my gosh how you loved them always so proud to show off your niece whenever you could. I should've come to the shore when you offered. I should've never believe led you when you told me just two weeks ago that you were holding good. I'm so sad you're gone. I just want to call you Nick. You were my person. Your last text to me says "that a girl" and in a way, I'll always feel like I was your girl. You were my guy. I'll miss you forever. To have to know a life without you is almost too much to bear. You got to meet my baby sister up there though gosh you two are probably making fun of me from up there. How I'm jealous you two are together. I feel so robbed down here. Just like you said when I told you I hated my new job "one day at a time" but the days will never being the same knowing you'll never be apart of them again. Thank you for taking care of me when I needed it. Thank you for being my guy. I wish I could've said goodbye and thank you - hell I wish I could've saved you. I'll cherish our memories forever. One day I'll get the strength to listen to your voicemails - hearing your voice is going to shatter me because when I tell you all I want is one more phone call, I mean it. I love you, Nicky. I love you forever and I'll miss you for eternity.

I miss you, Nicky. How are you really gone? I know these posts will never grant me any healing, I just don't know what else to do. In these times I usually call or text you and I can't now and every time I want to the wave hits all over again that you're gone & it's unbearable. You were one of the very true few I had and it's not fair that you're gone.

I'm having a day today, Nick. I just listened to one of your voicemails and hearing your voice tore me into pieces. How I'll never get to talk to you again, I'll never understand because it's all I want to do right now. I miss you so much why did you have to leave?
